

FIREARMS PRODUCTION IN AMERICA 2000 EDITION

A LISTING OF FIREARM MANUFACTURERS IN AMERICA WITH PRODUCTION HISTORIES BROKEN OUT BY FIREARM TYPE AND CALIBER

Violence Policy Center

The Violence Policy Center is a national non-profit educational organization that conducts research and public education on firearms violence and provides information and analysis to policymakers, journalists, grassroots advocates, and the general public. The Center examines the role of firearms in America, analyzes trends and patterns in firearms violence, and works to develop policies to reduce gun-related death and injury.

Research assistance for this edition of Firearms Production in America was provided by Brinda Adhikari, Marty Langley, and Rachel Weston. The study was edited by Aimée Stenzel.

This study was funded with the support of The Center on Crime, Communities & Culture of the Open Society Institute, The George Gund Foundation, The Joyce Foundation, and The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. Past studies released by the Violence Policy Center include:

Introduction

Firearms are one of America's most common consumer products. Yet surprisingly little is known about those who manufacture rifles, shotguns, and handguns in America. Information is difficult to obtain and detailed knowledge of the industry is often required to even know where to look. This study compiles production information about America's firearm manufacturers in a single volume.

Production figures listed in this study were obtained under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) from the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF). Information for the years 1986 to 1998 was obtained from annual ATF reports of firearms production. Information for the years 1975 to 1985 was obtained from ATF microfiches of the quarterly report forms for firearm manufacturers. Production figures prior to 1975 are not included. ATF does not release production information until two years after the production year. These are the only figures available. Omissions are not unlikely and stem from lack of information from ATF or unclear reporting. Manufacturers whose annual production did not exceed 1,000 for any given year are not included in the study unless they had exceeded the 1,000 weapons threshold in a prior year or were deemed to be of special interest. In addition, imported weapons are not included in this publication.

Manufacturers are listed alphabetically by licensee name or most commonly known trade or product name. Trade names may, however, represent different corporate entities. Abbreviations and punctuation for all manufacturers' names have been standardized. Manufacturers include both companies that produce finished firearms as well as those that produce components for firearms that would be tallied by ATF as firearms (such as receivers). When it is known that a listed manufacturer is not producing finished firearms, it is noted.

For the purposes of this study, once a company no longer registers production figures with ATF, it is assumed to no longer be producing firearms under that licensee name. Production information may not be available for companies that are, in fact, still in business or have changed their licensee or trade name. When information is available from the ATF report forms on a licensee change of name, it is offered. Notations regarding related, prior, or subsequent companies are also made, when known. For companies no longer submitting production information, the listed address is the last known city and state. For companies still submitting production information, the address is taken from the ATF reporting form or obtained from industry publications. Telephone numbers for companies currently filing reports have been obtained (either through directory information, catalog copy, or industry publications) when possible.

Caliber listings include not only all handguns produced of that caliber but also intermediate calibers that are greater than the previous caliber listing. For example, the 45 caliber pistol listing would include 40 caliber pistols and 10mm pistols. The 45 caliber listing also contains all calibers greater than 45 caliber and up to 50 caliber. Handgun caliber is the only information available from ATF regarding type of pistol or revolver. Caliber and gauge are not available for rifles or shotguns. For all firearms, manufacturers are not required to report production by model, nor are they required to report sales figures. Production numbers underlined in the study signify that the ATF information was not completely legible and that the number has been rounded off.

Some source documents obtained for this study from ATF were less than complete and at times contradictory or redundant. As a result, the figures sometimes needed to be interpreted with choices made as to how to tally the reported numbers. We have done this to the best of our ability and feel that the numbers contained herein offer the most accurate picture possible based on the information available. With this in mind, the Violence Policy Center welcomes any questions, comments, or corrections regarding the information contained in this study.

Appendix One

Firearms Terminology

Firearms refer to weapons that use a powder charge to fire a projectile. Non-powder firearms such as BB and pellet guns use a burst of air or other force (e.g. spring operated) to fire their projectiles and hence are not considered firearms, although they are capable of inflicting severe or fatal injuries.

Traditionally, firearms are broken down into essentially two groups: long guns and handguns. Long guns are configurations of weapons traditionally designed to be fired from the shoulder. According to ATF standards, to qualify as a rifle, the shoulder-fired weapon must have a barrel length of 16 inches, 18 inches for a shotgun. Long guns with shorter barrels fall under the National Firearms Act of 1934 and are considered sawed-off rifles or shotguns. Handguns are firearms designed to be fired with a single hand and are usually defined as having an overall length of less than 18 inches. Repeating firearms are those that allow the shooter, by operating a mechanism on the gun, to load another round after a shot has been fired. Manually operating the bolt, lever, pump, or other mechanism extracts and ejects the empty case after the cartridge has been fired. The action then reloads a fresh shell or cartridge from the magazine into the chamber and cocks the gun. Semi-automatic guns do this automatically when they fire. With each squeeze of the trigger the semi-automatic repeats the process of firing, ejecting, and reloading. Although a semi-automatic will fire only one cartridge per trigger pull, an automatic will fire more than one cartridge with one pull of the trigger. An automatic is also known as a machine gun.

Handguns are either revolvers or pistols. Revolvers have a round cylinder that is actually the magazine and acts as a chamber when properly aligned with the barrel. In double-action revolvers, each time the trigger is pulled the weapon fires and the cylinder advances to the next chamber. Single-action revolvers require that the hammer be manually cocked before each shot. A revolver's cylinder usually holds six cartridges. Instead of a revolving cylinder, a semi-automatic handgun (also known as a pistol) carries its extra cartridges in an ammunition magazine usually located in the handle of the handgun. Spring pressure forces the cartridges upward in the magazine. Each time the weapon is fired, a new cartridge is moved up and is loaded into the chamber. Pistols are often known as "automatics" although they do require a separate trigger pull for each shot. Pistols that are fully automatic—that will fire more than one cartridge per trigger pull—are known as machine pistols.

A subcategory of handguns are Saturday Night Specials or “junk guns”—small, short-barreled handguns made of inferior materials. Because of their low quality and inaccuracy, these weapons have no sporting purpose and are best suited for criminal use. Saturday Night Specials can be either pistols or revolvers.

Assault firearms are semi-automatic (firing one bullet per trigger pull), fully automatic (firing more than one bullet per trigger pull), or select fire (the weapon can be set to fire either semi-automatic or fully automatic) anti-personnel rifles, shotguns, and handguns that are designed primarily for military and law enforcement use and are not particularly suitable or readily adaptable for sporting purposes. Characteristics that are often present in assault weapons include: ability to accept a detachable ammunition magazine; folding stocks, flash suppressors, bipod mounts, pistol grips on rifles or shotguns; threaded barrels (allowing for the easy attachment of silencers on assault pistols); and, concealability relative to firearm type.
